SIGNIFICANCE OF CELEBRATION OF NATIONAL TEACHERS' DAY

On September 5th, India celebrates Teachers Day, a day meant to show our appreciation for all the people who have taught us throughout our lives, including our tutors and trainers in sectors other than academia. Dr. Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan, India's first vice president and second president, was born on September 5, 1888. On the anniversary of his birth, Teacher's Day is observed.

Teachers' Day is significant because it is a day set aside to recognize and honor the commitment and labor of teachers. This day is set aside to thank teachers for their commitment to their charges. It is also a day on which the honorable profession of teaching is emphasized, and emphasis is placed on the important part that teachers play in the advancement of a country by forming and molding the minds of children.

Because it helps increase the number of educated people worldwide, teaching is regarded as the most noble job in society. Teachers choose to become educators so that they can share their expertise and wisdom with others. The population's level of education is thought to be a crucial factor in the nation's progress. Therefore, a country has to have educated inhabitants that have the right guidance and vision in order to be economically successful. A teacher not only imparts knowledge in accordance with the curriculum, but also shapes students into responsible adults. Teachers today deserve more gratitude and recognition because they serve as role models for many people and are recognized by society.

The purpose of Teacher's Day is to provide children the chance to appreciate the work that their teachers do to ensure that they receive a high-quality education. Similar to this, teachers place a high value on Teacher's Day because it is the day when their efforts are honored by both reputable organizations and their students.

The address given by Priyasri Devi ma'am and Gitishmita Chakraborty ma'am Assistant Professor, Department of Education, was then uplifting and inspirational for pupils.
